GHSA conducted an online survey of its State Highway Safety Office (SHSO) members to take the pulse of current state efforts to control the problems of speeding and aggressive driving. All fifty states and Guam responded.

This report outlines the states' responses. It covers a number of key topics, including: the public perception of the issue; the conflicted role of technology; and the existing appetite for change.

The report also provides recommendations to states and the federal government to address the tremendous losses associated with speeding-related crashes.
